Le Kazakhstan dispose de ressources hydrauliques abondantes qui se concentrent principalement dans l'est et le sud du pays. Aujourd'hui, 15 grandes centrales hydroélectriques (>50 MW), d'une puissance totale de 2,25 GW, représentent jusqu'à 13 % de la capacité de production totale du pays.

Le Kazakhstan se présente comme un pays prometteur pour le développement et la mise en œuvre de projets hydroélectriques sur son territoire. L'État s'est fixé pour objectif ambitieux de porter à 50 % la part des énergies renouvelables (ci-après dénommées « ER ») dans la production d'électricité du pays d'ici 2050.

Les ressources hydroélectriques sont réparties sur l'ensemble du territoire, mais trois régions disposent de ressources particulièrement importantes : le bassin de l'Irtysh et ses principaux affluents (Bukhtarma, Uba, Ulba, Kurchum, Kardzhil), la zone sud-est avec le bassin de l'Ili, et la zone sud avec les bassins du Syr-Daria, du Talas et du Chu.

Vue d'ensemble

L'objectif du projet est la construction de 4 cascades de petites centrales hydroélectriques d'une puissance totale de 33,00 MW

Ce projet s'inscrit dans un cadre local et régional. Ce projet a pour objectif de couvrir la partie fondamentale des programmes de charge électrique du centre énergétique d'Almaty, situé dans la région d'Almaty, en République du Kazakhstan. La cascade sur la rivière se compose de 4 petites centrales hydroélectriques. Chaque centrale hydroélectrique de la cascade est un ensemble d'ouvrages hydrauliques et d'équipements techniques qui transforment l'énergie gravitationnelle de l'eau en énergie mécanique du débit, puis en énergie électrique, laquelle est ensuite acheminée vers les consommateurs.
